Small and midsize enterprises are looking for ways to cut their telecommunications costs while contending with ever-increasing bandwidth demands and an increasingly dispersed workforce.

Join Brett Theiss, New Edge's director of product management and channel programs and Bill McCarthy, Cisco General Manager, as they discuss how businesses can benefit from new technologies for powering their multi-site networks.

Key topics covered:

- New Edge's breakthrough network service offering that makes true MPLS Class of Service traffic prioritization available over private, business-class DSL connections.
- Comparative advantages of T1 and DSL-based platforms.
- Alternative access methods such as EVDO, Ethernet and IPsec and how they too can be utilized in a private MPLS network.
